

HAVE YOU CONSIDERED A HISTORY MINOR?

Minors in the History Department allow you to develop skills in the discipline built around your personal interests. They are an excellent complement to majors in intelligence, political science, business, languages, criminal justice and most other liberal arts majors.

What kind of minors are available?

- History Minor: Specialize in European, United States, Non-Western, or Military and Diplomatic History.
- African American Studies: Study the intersectional experiences of African American people, and their contributions to American history and culture.
- East Asian Studies: Study the history and culture of this dynamic region, in Collaboration with the Department of Modern Languages, Literatures & Cultures.
- International Relations: Develop knowledge of the transnational relationships connecting the world
- Southern Studies: Examine the nuances and complexities of Southern history and culture.
- War Studies: Study wars of present and past, while sharpening leadership and critical thinking skills.

What can you do with it?

Studying history develops citizens who are inquisitive, critical thinking, creative, and excellent researchers and writers. These are crucial skills in business, entrepreneurship, law, education, criminal justice, intelligence, and military careers.
